Meet the candidates, week 1: “What is your number one issue this election”?

My number-one issue is traffic and street safety. This is one of the most common issues that comes up when I talk with San Francisco residents, especially in District 9.

I believe that investing in infrastructure that increases pedestrian safety and improves traffic flow can improve San Francisco exponentially. From something as small as fixing potholes to creating physical bike line infrastructure and more visible lighting in our neighborhoods, walking, driving, or cycling should be as stressful as it feels today.

My plan is to become the most active chair in the Land Use and Transportation Committee and promote more investments in infrastructure and the development of safer and better-lit roads and streets for our communities.
