The tragedy in West Portal leaves a hole where a family once stood -- two beloved parents, and two children who will never grow up. Devastatingly sad. Families I've talked with don't feel safe on our streets. They are worried for their kids.

We don't yet know the cause of this accident, but we do know that this bus stop was at street level with little protection from cars. Our streets have been designed to move cars swiftly from place to place, not to keep pedestrians safe... and that puts everyone in danger, kids and adults alike.

We need to redesign our most dangerous intersections and also take immediate steps to protect pedestrians: Adding bollards. Moving bus stops up from the street. And enforcing traffic laws in every part of the City.
