I supported voting "Yes" on Propositions A, C, D, and G to support affordable housing, downtown revitalization, ethical city operations, and educational advancement.

I was a "Soft Yes" on Proposition E to cautiously support modern policing methods while considering privacy concerns. Conversely, I was a "Hard No" on Proposition F because forcing treatment on individuals with addiction—a disease, not a moral failing—while threatening their welfare benefits contradicts evidence-based medicine principles and jeopardizes the housing security of some of our most vulnerable members of society. See my full piece on Prop F here.

My stance on Proposition B was neutral. I'm not inherently opposed to voter-approved taxes for funding public safety measures; however, the political dynamics surrounding this measure underscore the divisions within our local political landscape. For detailed insights, I put together this voter guide: voterguidesf.com.
