Meet the candidates, week 7: “How will you navigate city bureaucracy and get things done?”

Our city government should work for PEOPLE, not for itself. My extensive experience in public service, community organizing, and the private sector has equipped me with a deep understanding of governmental processes.

I will push to overhaul our broken system of boards and commissions that has paralyzed City government and muddled our system of accountability. I will make the day to day challenges that residents face priority number one.

This means a singular focus on neighborhood services and outcomes. Until we fix this broken system, and ensure the Richmond district receives the attention and resources it deserves, we need strong leaders in office who obsess over delivering service to residents and small business owners. I am committed to being that leader.
